Lux Oasis Revenue-Share Staffing Model - 2026-07-02

Decision

Use a 20% acquisition upside only as 20% of Lux Oasis retained net profit from the unit they personally source/close, not 20% of the full property net profit. A 20% share of full property net is too expensive for acquisition-only work when Lux Oasis may only retain 15-20% management economics.

What the attached example shows

- JBR Murjan3 2301: owner share 85%, LOHH share about 15%, active months 14, average LOHH retained profit about AED 2,522/month.
- JBR Murjan2 UP01: owner share 82%, LOHH share about 18%, active months 7, average LOHH retained profit about AED 2,531/month.
- Combined positive-month average from the attached file: about AED 2,525 LOHH retained profit per unit per month before any acquisition-partner share or head-office staffing.

Recommended structure

- Property acquisition partner: 20% of LOHH retained net profit from units they personally source and help close, payable only after cash is collected and direct unit costs/owner payout are settled.
- Junior operations manager: fixed salary only when the portfolio contribution can cover it with buffer. Planning placeholder: AED 7,000/month.
- Player-manager/full-timer: do not hire fixed too early. Use variable upside first; consider fixed full-time only when the portfolio can cover junior ops plus the player-manager and still leave Damiano's financial-freedom target intact.

Unit-count math

Assuming the 20% acquisition partner share is taken from LOHH retained profit:

Case	LOHH retained/unit before acquirer	After 20% acquirer	Units for AED 50k after no fixed hire	Units after AED 7k junior ops	Units after AED 19k junior + player-manager
Weak unit	AED 2,000	AED 1,600	31.2	35.6	43.1
Attached-file average	AED 2,525	AED 2,020	24.8	28.2	34.2
Good unit	AED 3,500	AED 2,800	17.9	20.4	24.6
Strong unit	AED 5,000	AED 4,000	12.5	14.2	17.2

Practical thresholds

- Before 5 units: avoid fixed payroll. Pay variable only, per closed/source unit.
- Around 5-8 decent units: junior ops can start making sense if the units are producing around AED 2.5k-3.5k/month each for LOHH and cash is stable.
- Around 15-25 strong revenue-share units: the full target becomes realistic, depending on unit quality and whether there is fixed payroll.

- If units average only AED 2k/month to LOHH, the target needs roughly 29 units even with only junior ops. That is too many unless acquisition velocity is strong.

Candidate message implication

For Syed Imran and similar candidates, sell the upside as: they can earn a share from units they personally bring and help close, but only on cash-collected, unit-specific net retained profit. Do not promise a fixed salary or a share of the whole company at this stage.

Addendum - Acquisition Plus Operations Role

If the person is not only sourcing properties but also onboarding, operating and managing the portfolio, use one unit-level performance pool instead of stacking separate uncapped commissions.

Recommended structure:

- Acquisition-only: 20% of LOHH retained net profit from units they personally source/help close.
- Acquisition plus active operations: 25% of LOHH retained net profit from units they personally source, help close, onboard and actively manage.
- Exceptional A-to-Z operator: up to 30% of LOHH retained net profit, but only after proof that they can source, close, onboard, manage guest/cleaning/owner operations and reduce Damiano's daily workload.
- Do not go above 30% unless there is no fixed salary, no separate ops cost, no company-level profit share, and the person is clearly driving enough acquisition velocity to justify it.

The share should be paid only after owner payout, direct property costs and collected cash. It should be unit-specific, not a share of the whole company.

If a helper is added under this person, keep the total people-share pool capped. The clean version is: the lead operator receives 25-30% and pays/manages their own helper from that pool, or Lux Oasis approves a separate junior ops cost only once the portfolio economics can support it. Do not pay 30% to the lead plus another 10% to a helper on the same unit unless the unit is unusually strong.

Economic reading from the current examples:

Share to acquisition/ops lead	LOHH kept from AED 2,525 average unit	Units for AED 50k before fixed payroll	Units after AED 7k junior ops
20%	AED 2,020	24.8	28.2
25%	AED 1,894	26.4	30.1
30%	AED 1,768	28.3	32.2
35%	AED 1,641	30.5	34.7

Best offer to start:

Offer 25% of LOHH retained net profit for units the person personally sources, helps close, onboards and actively manages, with a possible step-up to 30% only after a trial period and only for units where they are genuinely acting as A-to-Z operator. If they stop actively managing the unit, the ongoing share should step down to the acquisition-only level or expire after a defined period.
